A former Venezuelan general, Cliver Alcalá Cordones, was sentenced on Monday to 21 years and eight months in federal prison after pleading guilty in the United States to having supplied weapons and provided protection to Colombian guerrillas.

Alcalá Cordones, who admitted publicly to having conspired to overthrow Venezuelan leader Nicolás Maduro, received the long sentence despite agreeing with prosecutors to plead guilty to helping members of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia — known by its Spanish abbreviation, FARC — in exchange for favorable treatment.

Despite the deal, prosecutors asked the judge to impose a 30-year sentence, arguing that Alcalá Cordones was one of the top leaders of the drug-trafficking organization the Cartel de los Soles, allegedly controlled by the Venezuelan military and top leaders of Maduro's socialist regime.

Evidence given before sentencing showed the former general gained financially from an active role in drug trafficking, receiving at times $150,000 per shipment. Alcalá Cordones denied having any direct role in the illegal drug trade.

"As a high-ranking

The country's courts and intelligence agencies were used to facilitate the shipment of tons of cocaine to the United States in partnership with the FARC, a guerrilla organization dedicated to the violent overthrow of the Colombian government, the prosecutor's office said.

"The Cartel de Los Soles sought not only to enrich its members and enhance their power but also to weaponize cocaine by inflicting the drug's harmful and addictive effects on users in the United States," the Justice Department said in the news release.

The Justice Department said Alcalá's role in the drug trade was tracked back to the start of 2006, when he took advantage of his role in the Venezuelan military to support the FARC as that organization shipped tons of drugs to the United States.

Among his alleged activities, Alcalá Cordones protected FARC members from being arrested by Venezuelan law enforcement or from being confronted by the Venezuelan military. Those protected by the former general include top guerrilla leaders Luciano Marín Arango and Rodrigo Londoño Echeverri, prosecutors alleged.

In addition, Alcalá Cordones participated in meetings with some of the largest drug traffickers in South America, during which they discussed how he and other members of the cartel could assist them in cocaine distribution, prosecutors said.

Alcalá Cordones also personally intervened to ensure that law enforcement in Venezuela did not intercept large cocaine shipments. In exchange, Alcalá Cordones received millions of dollars in cocaine-fueled bribes, the news release said.

Cliver Alcalá Cordones

member of the Venezuelan military and the Cartel de Los Soles, Cliver Antonio Alcalá Cordones and his co-conspirators sought to weaponize cocaine as they helped the FARC arm its members and ship tons of drugs to the United States," said U.S. Attorney Damian Williams of the Southern District of New York.

"Alcalá Cordones corrupted the vital institutions of his own country as he helped the FARC flood this country with cocaine — but no longer. Instead, he will now spend more than two decades in a United States prison," Williams said in a news release.

According to U.S. officials, Alcalá Cordones and other high-ranking Venezuelan officials served as leaders and administrators of the Soles cartel, using their power and influence within the country's security apparatus to consolidate control of the drug trade inside the South American country.
